University of Florida - Human Performance

The Human Performance concentration is a 2-year, non-thesis program leading to a Master of Science degree. It's purpose is to merge a range of courses within the department into a curriculum that will provide educational background to students with an interest in studying the factors that determine the limits to human performance.

The curriculum allows students to focus on specific areas of sport or clinical applications that best meet their individual interests. Human Performance incorporates components such as sport nutrition; exercise and sport psychology; exercise physiology; motor behavior; biomechanics; and strength and conditioning which are viable to clinical populations.
